

I do not believe the government or a body set up by them has the ability or even the intention of deciding what is genuinely true or not. To give a department the power to decide what is truth and to censor what they don't like is a threat to democracy. There is ample evidence of governments and departments getting an issue completely wrong and they have a very poor record of correction. This is inviting the "ministry of truth" to make a judgement which they are not equipped to do, and so should not be done. Restricting free speech does not promote truth.
