

Published name

Stefan

Short comment

An aviation passenger rights scheme including responsibilities and compensations should be developed. Similar regulations are in place in other countries and in the EU defining what airlines have to do in case of interruptions and what compensations passengers are entitled to. With no such scheme currently available, passengers are depending on the goodwill of the carrier, their negotiation skills or contact person they are talking to without any compensation rights.