

To whom this concerns,

The current video game classification needs to change, R rated games need to reflect the same as R rated movies. Currently Sex and drugs are not allowed in R rated games but are fine in R rated films and sometimes even MA rated movies. Due to this discrepancy several video games that are available all around the world were banned in Australia, this made sense before Australia had an R rating but now it just doesn't make sense. A uniform rating across games and film will prevent this from happening and it is common sense. Drugs and sex are no different in a video game medium to film and this is backed up by all the science.

Kind Regards

Jack