I know you track down abusers after the fact. But if everyone had to provide verified ID to have a social media account or webpage hosting accounts then most would not abuse in the first place. And those that did would be easily identified.

I don't understand why the subject of verified ID hasn't come up in the discussion. Its a no brainer. You have to provide ID for a lot of commercial sites. It should be mandatory for social media accounts. Take away the anonymity and you take away the bravado.

This would also go a long way towards ending online fraud. For example, Facebook and eBay are littered with advertising for fake goods that either don't exist, or inferior copies are sent to the buyer.

This one simple thing would solve many, many problems. Thus saving huge amounts of human resources and funds. As well as saving many from becoming victims.
